IDLENESS.

THE Jews have a saying among them, "that "he who does not bring his son up to some "business, makes him a thief." Idleness they look on as the ground of all evil, whether publick or private; for the mind of man will be employed, and rather than do nothing, it will work mischief. The Parthians were such enemies to idleness, that they did not suffer their children to eat till they had sweated at their exercises. And Scipio, surnamed Nasica, fearing peace should introduce this bane into the Commonwealth of Rome, said, that he looked upon the Romans, after the destruction of Carthage, to be in greater danger than they had ever yet been, for they had no enemies. Idleness he esteemed a more terrible enemy to the State than Carthage had been, though that Commonwealth had forced the Romans to the greatest extremity.

There are numbers contaminated with this vice, yet think themselves entirely free from it: He who spends his whole time in the stable, and on the course; he who is ever found with cards or dice-box in his hand; he that flies to a bottle or a strumpet to relieve thought, and prevent time's lying heavy on his hands; the ladies that pass their day in talking scandal, or, when they go abroad, divert their time in impertinent visits to shop-keepers, asking a thousand questions, and tumbling over their goods without even a thought of buying any; these may be well ranked among the idle. He that neglects his duty and real employment, naturally endeavours to fill his mind with something that may blot out the remembrance of his own folly; and does any thing but what he ought to do, with eager diligence, that he may keep himself in his own favour.

Solon introduced a severe law into his Commonwealth against idleness, and the Areopagites (Judges in criminal cases) were very vigilant in inquiring into the life and manners of every particular subject, and in seeing this law put in execution, as may be seen by the following story.

There were at Athens two poor young men, Mendemus and Aselepiades, who were greatly addicted to the study of philosophy; they had no visible means of support, yet kept up their flesh and colour, looked hale, well, and in good case. The Judges had information given them of the retired life of these two, and of their having neither any thing to live on, nor apparently doing any thing to maintain them; consequently, as they could not live without sustenance, they must have some clandestine means of subsisting. On this information, the young men were summoned before the Judges, and ordered to answer to the charge. One of the accused said, little credit was given to what a man could urge in his own defence, it being natural to believe every criminal will either deny or extenuate the crime he is charged with; and as the testimony of a disinterested person was not liable to suspicion, he desired a certain Baker, whom he named, might be summoned, and answer for them. The Baker being come, he declared that the young men under examination took it by turns to grind his corn every night, and that for the night's work he every morning paid the young man who ground at his mill a Drachma (a Groat). The Judges, surprized at their abstinence and industry, ordered a reward of two hundred Drachmas to be paid them, out of the public treasury.

Seneca says, we all complain of the shortness of time, and yet have much more than we know what to do with. Our lives are spent either in doing nothing at all, or in doing nothing to the purpose, or else in doing nothing that we ought to do.

Every member of society is under a tacit obligation to contribute to the general good. He is unjust if he does not, and ought to be looked on as a burthensome member; and as he will do nothing for the public, ought to receive no protection from it.

An ANECDOTE of a stiff Bowl of Punch.

ON the 25th of October, 1694, a bowl of punch was made at the Right Hon. Edward Russell's house, when he was Captain-General and Commander in Chief of his Majesty's forces in the Mediterranean seas. It was made in a fountain in a garden, the middle of four walks, all covered over-head with lemon and orange-trees; and in every walk was a table, the whole length of it, covered with cold collations, &c. In the said fountain were the following ingredients, viz. four hogsheads of brandy, eight hogsheads of water, 25,000 of lemons, 20 gallons of lime juice, 1300 weight of fine white Lisbon sugar, five pound of grated nutmegs, 300 toasted biscuits, and last a pipe of dry Mountain Malaga. Over the fountain was a large canopy built to keep off the rain; and there was built on purpose a large boat, wherein was a boy belonging to the fleet, who rowed round the fountain, and gave the cups to the company; and in all probability more than 6000 men drank thereof.
